Introduction

Human being, by nature of being finite, limited in space and time, has always tried to define the world around him.

This is because he finds it necessary to clarify, control and be able to delimit his surroundings, to protect himself from the innate fear of the unknown.

A clear definition simplifies communication and understanding. The downside is the gradual loss of the ability to recognize and accept as equally real everything that lies on the border of definitions.

The question around which the show revolves is therefore this: If we stopped trying to draw boundaries, pigeonhole reality, would the substance of things change?

The Show

"A space castaway" is forced to come to terms with himself and explore the meanders of his being, inhabiting an abstract landscape composed exclusively of two circles. During the course of the show, these circles create different images and suggestions reflecting the complex and profound universe of the subconscious.

The castaway thus embarks on the journey towards knowledge, overcoming his own limits and the challenges proposed by the structure that keeps changing. In this way the show is always genuine and authentic, where risk and precariousness act as a link between the artist and the audience.

All this is enriched by theater and dance (hip-hop, contemporary, acrodance), so that the circus arts are not just a pretext for acrobatics and virtuosity, but a real communication tool.

This new language gives the artist the possibility of using different skills in harmony with each other, creating a unique and personalized show.

Music plays a fundamental role.

Tailored for the show, music will facilitate the audience entering the world of the character, "feeling" his moods, his doubts, his emotions.
